University-model, performing arts, international, Catholic, all girls—the options for a private education in Austin are as varied as the people who live here. Want your kids to speak fluent Arabic, Hebrew or Spanish? You have choices. Want your children to master the classical techniques of logic and rhetoric in a Christian context? You have even more choices. Selecting the right private school can be daunting; not only is a school a place for your kids to learn, it can also feel like a community and way of life for the entire family. To help simplify things, we did the homework for you. Here are 40 of the top private schools in the area that teach at least sixth grade and have an enrollment of 100 students or more. Plus, we look at some outstanding smaller schools for artists, performers and students with different abilities and learning styles. Sharpen your No. 2 pencils and get ready to learn—pedagogical diversity is alive and well in our great city.
